JOCELYNE CHAIT
Community Planning

Jocelyne Chait is an urban planning consultant focusing on community-based planning and sustainable development. Jocelyne has worked with local and citywide organizations and institutions as well as public agencies, on a number of planning initiatives and research projects; she brings a holistic, integrative approach to urban development. Much of Jocelyne's work for the past 20 years has focused on planning under Section 197-a of the New York City Charter, both in terms of developing implementable plans with local communities and promoting a citywide community planning agenda. She has also provided technical assistance to community boards and local communities responding to proposed rezoning and development plans. Jocelyne has a Master in Urban Planning from Hunter College and a Diploma from the Architectural Association in London.
